THE EVENING STAR. WASHINGTON

CEOSBY & NOTES Editor.

The Evening Star has a regular, permanent, bena fee daily circulation more than trebithat of any other daily paper published in Washington, and equal to that of all the other dally papers here added together.

THE STAR office is connected with the Telephone Exchirge. Advertisements, orders for the paper by ma; erd otherwise, news, or any information or business can be sent day or night, free of charge.

Business and Newspapers. Whether it is due to presperous times or to the adoption of more intelligent and enterprising business methods than were former y employed, it is not easy to determine, but the fact is apparent that at no time in their history has the pressure of advertisements upon the columns of the leading newspapers of the United States been so great as it is at the present time. Tals extraordinary demand for space is felt by the old established journals of large circulation and recognized value as advertising media in every part of the country, and with most of them it has been a daily recurring struggle to preserve that just balance which should always be maintained between their adver-Using and reading patrons. Of these gratifying evidences of appreciation on the part the business community and of the difficulties attending their accommodation THE EVENING STAR has had its full share, -and, considering all things, perhaps a greater proportion than any other paper in the country. At times, in some of the single issues, as its readers know, its reading matter has been reduced to a minimum, as to amount, that is, for on no occasion has anything of importance been omitted, nor has it failed to present each day a complete epitome of everything of interest transpiring in any part of the world. While, therefore, its readers may sometimes have been apparently alight losers as to quantity, they have really lost nothing, if they have not on the other hand actually gained something, in quality, since they were invariably furnished with the essence of each day's life,-the kernel of the time, so to speak, without husk or shell.

But, however, that point may be regarded, the general average of reading matter has been fully restored, if indeed it has not been more than made up by the double-sheet issues sent forth from time to time, as occasion seemed to require. The recapitualtion of a few pertinent facts will effectually demonstrate this proposition. During the week closing with to-day, for example, THE STAR has printed more than 120 columns of reading matter, a large part of which was original, and prepared expressly for it,-being an average of over 20 columns per day. Inasmuch as the whole space of the regular issues of the paper consists of 28 columns each, or 168 columns per week, it will be perceived that the amount of reading matter proper, in addition to the advertisements,-which, by the way, are also in the nature of fresh, interesting and useful intelligence-is liberal, to say the least, in view of the small amount charged there for. For the trifling sum of ten cents the regular subscriber to The Star has in fact been furnished during the week with more and better reading matter than can ordinarily be bought in book form for twenty times that amount.

These facts have doubtless been observed and also appreciated by the readers of the paper; and they are only mentioned here as an evidence and earnest that its proprietors have no thought of promoting the interests of one class of its patrons at the expense of those of another. In other words, while the interests of advertisers will be studied and faithfully cared for, the rights of readers are not, and will not be overlooked in the future, as they have never been in the past. THE STAR realizes that its success and strength lie in its well-earned character for fair dealing. Since It came into the hands of its present management It has invariably given to its customers-whether advertisers or subscribers,-more and better service for the money than has ever been given or probably ever will be given by any other paper published in Washington. This character it has fairly earned, and fully enjoys, and this character it means to maintain, without loud professions or wordy promises. It is content to let its acts speak for themselves.

The papers of the country, north, south, east and west, have, without exception so far as we have seen, advocated the reclamation of the Potomac marshes in front of the national capital, nothing has been done by Congress in this direction. It had been supposed that when the commission of government engineers had supplied the plans asked for by Congress there would be no hesitancy in authorizing the commencement of the work. Yet these reports and plans, made upon careful surveys by the best engineering talent in the government service, have been before Congress for some time, and no progress whatever has been made in legislation upon the subject. The recommendations of the engineer commission seem to supply all the data needed for intelligent legislation, and if the plan made after such thorough study of the subject, and by engineer officers of such standing as Gens Wright, Gillmore and the others is not a safe and practical one it is hopeless to expect that one will ever be supplied. In fact the drawback to the adoption of the plan is that it is so entirely honest and straightforward in its purposes. It has nothing for the lobby, and is not in the interest of any of the land-grabbers. It proposes to have the work done under government control, and that every foot of the ground reclaimed shall be the property of the government. The measure, therefore, naturally has the active hostility of the land-grabbers who want to get possession of the river front; of the tramp engineers who want to get a job, and see no chance to do so if the work is done under government control; and it is further antagonized by the jobbers who work upon principle against any project that does not give them a "divide," and by the subsidy schemers who object to any diversion of the appropriations from their own channels. Then, again, the Congressmen, in the crowded state of the calendar. quite generally grudge every moment of time given to the consideration of District matters. Finally, the District of Columbia has no voice or repre. sentation in Congress to command influence and join in "log-rolling" combinations by which votes for an appropriation for the Washington harbor can be swopped for votes for appropriations for other places or purposes. These are some of the reasons why a measure of such conceded importance as the reclamation of the malarial marshes in front of Washington fails to get consideration. It is to be hoped that when the bill gets another hearing, members will not delay action upon it by frivolous objections. Their constituents evidently will endorse their action in passing it without a

While some persons may take exceptions to the amount awarded by the jury yesterday to Mr. Kilbourn as damages for having been imprisoned by order of the House of Representatives several years ago for refusing to reveal to one of its committees his private business affairs, there is likely to be very general satisfaction at the fact that a halt has been called at last and effectually to such arbitrary and senseless usurpations of power as provoked the suit. The great drawback to the verdict is the fact that the amount of damages cannot be assessed against and collected from the individual members of the House who voted to send Mr. Kilbourn to jail. That process would enforce the much-needed lesson in a way that would not soon be forgotten by them or their successors. As it is, unfortunately, the people will eventually have to foot the bill; for nobody sup- PRICES as LOW from YELLOW WAGONS marked poses that members of Congress will suffer or INDEPENDENT ICE CO., as from any COMPANY in allow any of its officers to suffer pecuniary loss so long as they have the power of voting money out of Uncle Sam's treasury.

There is a promise of a lively time in the House next week. Party oratory and political pyrotechpies will have ample occasion for display in the contested election cases. The contests of Lynch against Chalmers, Lowe against Wheeler, and Mackey against O'Connor, have already become party questions and there is, perhaps, not a single nember of the House who has not fully made up his mind as to how he will vote upon each of them-Every member will vote with his party and no emount of argument could persuade him to do Therwise. But the speeches in these cases are not expected to influence votes in the House. They ere intended for outside effect; to arouse party feeting; stir up the country, and awaken it to the Important fact that an election is approaching.

Thursday's debate in the Senate on the subject of the bad distribution of public documents printed at the expense of the country should open the way to some correction of the complaint. Much of this sort of product is dispatched in the mails to the private friends of Congressmen out of mere compliment or as a cheap way to make or maintain personal or political friendships. All this is an abuse. Perhaps the best remedy would be found in obtaining information through the Bureau of Education as to the localities of public libraries and other institutions to which the people might profusion and prices low.
